Hartington

Hartington is the major village on the central section of the valley of the Dove. It is an old village which was granted a market charter in 1203. The church was built in the $14^{th}-15^{th}$ centuries from local sandstone. Opposite the church stands the 17^{th} century Hartington Hall which is now a Youth Hostel. Nuttall's creamery, once a source of Stilton and Buxton Blue cheese, lies just off the Green. Cheese was produced here from 1900 to 2009. Sadly, in 2008 the creamery was sold by Dairy Crest to Long Clawson Dairy, a rival Stilton maker (Leicestershire is one of the two other areas permitted to make Stilton cheese) and within a month they took steps to close the creamery down - with the loss of 190 jobs. Until then Hartington was the supplier of 25% of the world output of Stilton cheese. There is still a cheese shop outside selling a range of local cheeses but none now from Hartington.

It's 112 miles from Milton Keynes to Hartington village and will take around 2 hours to drive.

The earthwork remains of Pilsbury Castle occupies an area of high ground overlooking the River Dove and was probably originally an Iron Age fortification before being used by the Normans. Indeed the name 'Pilsbury Castle' is formed from the Celtic 'pil', the Saxon 'bury' and the Norman "castle", all meaning a 'fortified site'.

Ilam Cross

Stepping Stones

The Ilam Hall was built in the 1820's and was converted into a luxurious hotel in the 1920's. The business went bankrupt and the house was sold for demolition. A benefactor saved the day by donating it to the National Trust in 1934. Today it houses a Youth Hostel and a Learning Centre. The church in Ilam is Saxon in origin and inside contains a font of the same age carved with humans and dragons. There will be plenty of time to look at these places and visit the Manifold tearooms. For those wanting a sharp hill climb after lunch, Thorpe Cloud (942 feet) offers excellent views over the River Dove and Ilam (a short detour after the stepping stones).

Cressbrook Mill

Monsal Trail

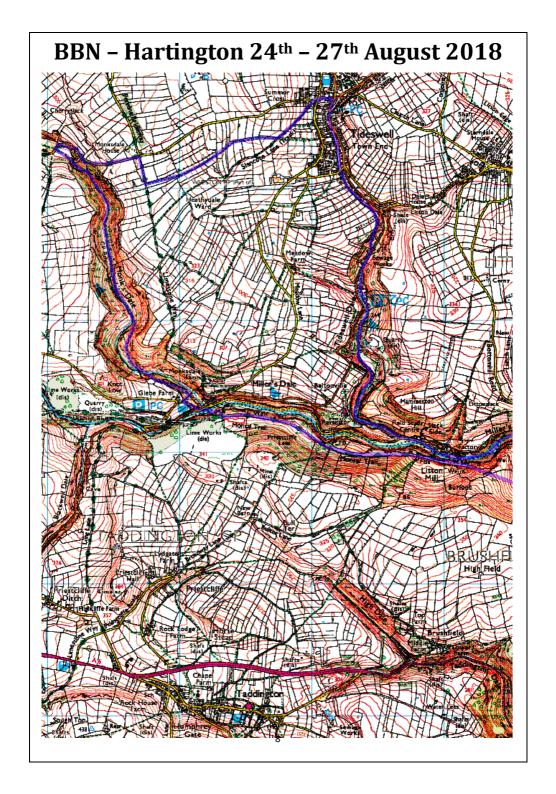

The original textile mill at Cressbrook was built by Sir Richard Arkwright, often called the 'father of the industrial revolution' for his invention of the spinning frame. Tideswell Church is widely known as the 'Cathedral of the Peak' (it is not a cathedral) due to its size and splendour. Inside, there is an exhibition of the works of William Newton (1750–1830), a labouring class poet often referred to as 'the Peak Minstrel'. He made his fortune as owner of Cressbrook Mill and the exhibition includes details of the life of apprentices at Litton and Cressbrook mills.

Monyash Mere

River Bradford

Lathkill dale is one of the finest of the limestone dales and a Nature Reserve. The section of the dale above Over Haddon was once home to several very profitable lead mines. The mines were worked from the 13th century until operations ceased in 1851, defeated by water problems. Sections of the workings may still be seen, especially the aqueduct which carried water to a large water wheel that was once used to pump water from the mine. One consequence of the mines was the water table was lowered considerably and in a drought the river would run almost dry - indeed in an average summer there may be little more than a trickle of water.
